There are many local tourist offices (and Syndicats d'Initiatives) in Corsica. Some are excellent and the bigger ones have English speaking staff, but even with pidgin French you should be able to get basic information or at least get them to send printed material. You will see that I have made links to websites if the office has one and the links are to the English language versions where they exist:

The Agence de Tourisme de la Corse (ATC) is the national tourist office and is represented by the Maison de la France (MF) offices in most major countries, so you can always try them in the capital city in your own country. The MF websites in your country can be obtained from the MF website, but don't expect too much on Corsica.

The ATC has an official web site and while it's predecessor was useless, this one works well and for the moment anyway the data is up to date; the accommodation guides are quite good and show internet connections. The ATC publishes a wide range of information publications, including on accommodation, some of which downloadable. Do not regard any of these as the fount of all knowledge. You will still have to do a fair amount of work yourself, unless you are happy with the bare essentials of information.

One excellent way to find out more, once you have targetted a particular place is to visit the website of the region, town or village. To help you do this, download my pdf of Villages and Towns of Corsica. This listing of hundreds of websites has links to make it easier for you.
